Big enough to take up a whole lap, and bright enough to hold attention through a long afternoon perusal, this informative picture book glances through examples of animal interconnectedness, all while teaching the terms applied to nature's groupings. You'll learn that murmurations of starlings band together to discourage attacks, and that a group of elephants is called a "memory" (and is led by its brave women). Lovely collages capture the creatures in their cozy habitats for pages of fun, diverse learning.
