Stylized illustrations and a charming narrator bring this stranger-than-fiction story to life. After Henry Miller, an Englishman who made a fortune mining silver in Idaho, passed and the bank swindled his wife and son, they were left with nothing but the house he had built for them and the pigs they kept—and the town's complaints about the latter. Determined to stay in her home and keep her pigs, Annie Miller made the obvious choice: move the whole lot four miles down the road.
