“You should see my mommy when she marches,” boasts a proud child in this inspiring picture book about taking a stand. Her mother leads the way in rainbow pants, her protest sign held high; behind her trails a diverse gathering of activists, all refusing to be silent in the face of injustice. Its messages applicable to a range of social justice situations, the story stands as an evergreen reminder that, when it comes to speaking truth, “sometimes you have to say it with your feet.”
