a way to get born

*grandma tied a towel around my belly, tight enough to girdle blackened stomach. breasts too, to get milk out. she folded me like a sheet or a soldier's death flag. cotton. creases. kin. this is how she would prepare my body. i'm a swaddled baby, a woman in a ghost sheet, sexless, breasts collapsing underneath gauze, milk pushing through.
my soiled spots look like buttons of spray paint. i want us touching.
i want him to feel his mama. when i hold him, he roots at my wish breasts.*
