Tending the Fire: Native Voices and Portraits

Christopher Felver, Photographer
University of New Mexico Press (Apr 15, 2017)
Hardcover $49.95 (248pp)
978-0-8263-5645-1

Felver's portraits, and excerpts from Native American writers, emphasize the interconnectedness of Native communities.

Three generations. Ninety-six authors. Thousands of years of ancestral wisdom, imagery, and lore. That's what's inside Tending the Fire: Native Voices and Portraits, a compelling visual and literary introduction to indigenous American authors. Christopher Felver collected short handwritten pieces from the contributors; these are displayed across from his black-and-white photo portraits.

Writers eye the camera levelly and forthrightly, evincing the gorgeous diversity of Native American physical appearances, a trait echoed in their divergent writing styles and themes. There are whimsical song lyrics from Martha Redbone, a graphic novel snippet from Arigon Starr, impassioned poetry by Travis Coke, and an excerpt of a memoir by Diane Wilson. The rock stars of the Native American literary movement are here, too, including Alexie, Silko, Momaday, Erdrich, and Harjo, alongside lesser-known talents to savor.

An elegant, elegiac introduction from Linda Hogan plays with the metaphorical fire title, consistently cycling back to the idea that indigenous authors are keeping their cultural traditions and connections to the earth alive, and that they come from a sensibility grounded in different ways than that of Euro-Americans. Writing and telling stories is a way of healing, she says, of reconnecting to old ways, and of “decolonizing.”

Felver’s lively 2015 interview with Mary Jean Robertson, host of Voices of the Native Nation, comes in midway. Robertson shares her encyclopedic knowledge of American Indian history and activism, and reinforces some common themes that ripple through the book, including of environmental stewardship and the need to more equitably shift governance from the resource-grabbing few back to a more collective model.

While it is most expressive to read the contributors’ words in their own handwriting, particularly when they are adorned with illustrations, some of the writers have the impenetrable script of a harried physician.

The volume concludes with short biographies of each of the writers and is satisfyingly summed up in Felver’s epilogue of how the book evolved, reinforcing the “interconnectedness of Native communities.” Tending the fire, indeed.

RACHEL JAGARESKI (May/June 2017)

Disclosure: This article is not an endorsement, but a review. The author of this book provided free copies of the book to have their book reviewed by a professional reviewer. No fee was paid by the author for this review. Foreword Reviews only recommends books that we love. Foreword Magazine, Inc. is disclosing this in accordance with the Federal Trade Commission's 16 CFR, Part 255.

Source: https://www.forewordreviews.com/reviews/tending-the-fire/