You won't find more exotic characters and setting, or a more complex (and powerful) political theme, than Eliot Pattison serves up in The Lord of Death (Soho Crime, 978-1-56947-579-9). It's set in Tibet, where Shan Tao Yun, a former Chinese cop, must find a killer in order to save his imprisoned son.

The sixth in a series, The Lord of Death is beautifully written, full of intrigue, and INSIGHTFUL IN ITS FRAMING of the historical and contemporary issues between China and Tibet. Warning: some of the torture scenes are disturbing not only for their graphic depiction but also because they mirror what happens in present-day Tibet.
